Warning: Many trails, except Trail 11, have portions that use ravine streambeds as trail surface, and sections of those trails can become slick and the trail tread uneven. Parts of these trails may be impassible during high water and should be considered closed during such times. Use alternate trails during high water. Ladders are part of Trail 3. Ladders can be hazardous for visitors with some medical conditions or disabilities. Hikers with small children and pets should use alternate trails.

DESCRIPTIO OF TRAILS

EASY (.5 mile)—A short hike high above Turkey Run in the mouth of the ancient Michigan River was slowly compacted and cemented into solid rock. The swampy canyon bottoms, or “runs,” would often huddle there to through these natural funnels into a central location for numbers of turkeys lived in the area, prompting its name. The best times to see turkeys are when the weather is cold and they are in search of food. They are not usually on the wing during such times and alternate trails used.

MODERATE (.7 mile)—Virgin woods, hemlock canopies over the trail provide some shade. Many historic structures are preserved at Turkey Run, including the Richard Lieber Home and mill site. The Log Church, built in 1871, stands as a reminder of the area’s hard-working young men of the Civilian Conservation Corps, Camp 8, stationed here in 1934-1935. The restored house is open for settlement to own this land. The restored house is open for

Turkey Run State Park

Classic examples of natural and human history abound at Turkey Run State Park, from its deep canyons nestled in the shadows of sandstone and peaceful hemlock groves to the Salmon Lusk Home and mill site.

Our second state park also invites you to some of Indiana’s most ruggedly beautiful hiking trails through lush canyons, deep pools, mossy woods and ferns to the majestic old-growth walnuts and sycamores, lush plant communities thrive. With miles of hiking trails, Deep track, beaver-chewed trees, plicated woodpecker excavations and the rocky flight of the Turkey Run Valley are common sights throughout the year.

Turkey Run is located in west-central Indiana on State Road 47, 2 miles east of S.R. 41. The first parcel of Turkey Run’s 2,382 acres was purchased during the state’s centennial in 1916, when the state park
